RAILWAY ENTERPRISE IN THE MALAY PENINSULA.

There are few parts of the world in which British enterprise has been more actively displayed than in the Malay peninsula; and the energy which has been shown has been well repaid by an extraordinary development of trade, and by the introduction of peace and order in a land where those blessings have for centuries been unknown. The picture represents the opening of the first State railway in the protected province of Selangor. The troops of the protectorate, under a British officer, contribute to the splendour of the display. The group of spectators is composed of many nationalities; the Briton, the Chinaman, and the Malay mingling together in a perfect comity to do honour to an occasion which will bring profit to them all.
