Perihal

Pada tahun 1980-an dan 1990-an, bandar Kajang masih menjadi tumpuan penduduk Bandar Baru Bangi, kerana pusat-pusat pentadbiran, perkhidmatan awam, membeli-belah, dan sebagainya, masih terletak di sini.

Peta lama Kajang: "This is an old map of Kajang. Development in Kajang town and its suburbs is moving at a pace too fast. Its urban landscape is changing and the natural surrounding transforms. Township modernization starting from late 80s has disturbed the easy-going lifestyle of this southern town of Selangor." (Kajang Heritage Centre 乌鲁冷岳社区文物馆, 2 Ogos 2015: "This is an old map of Kajang").

Nama asalnya ialah "Queen Cinema":-

"Queen Cinema or later changed to National Cinema in Kajang was established by Kong Family. Besides entertaining Kajang folks with film shows, it was also used as hall for ceremony. The pictures showed line ups of notables congratulating Ng Bow Thai being awarded title by the King."

The present Metro Plaza site was a tin mine by Towkay Chow Yoke who owned the row of shop houses along Main Street. If you notice a bridge over Langkat River, it was not at present site. The wooden bridge link from Lorong Mendeling to the opposite bank at about 50m down the river from the present location. This is something interesting we found from National Archive. Kemungkinan bangunan yang sama setelah ditambah dan diubahsuai (2017), sebelum dirobohkan:-

"I got a hint from a friend confirming the old Colonial architecture at the end of stadium should be the Kajang Recreation Club established in 1895. It was used as RTM store for the past decades. In the Selangor Journal published in 1890s, the British planters and Colonial officials set up the Club and hence the road leading from town to the open field and the Club was named Club Road (Jalan Kelab now). This historical building should be preserved and restored. Isn't it good if the building were to be restored and be converted into public place such as gallery or heritage centre." Premis dan Kedai

Kedai Terawal

Kedai terawal dibina pada tahun 1896: No.1 Jalan Besar: “In 1896, 40 shop houses were built in Section 1 which covered Main Street, Tukang Street, Jln. Tengah and Mendaling Street. This shop house which is no.1 at Main Street and the one beside could be of earliest batch or built within the decade. This corner lot was said to be acquired and demolished to give way for road broadening. Or, should it be conserved and restored and repurposed to mark the history of establishment of Kajang Town?”

Gambar di kaki lima kedai ini. Sedikit latar belakangnya: "This is a corner lot at a busy cross section into Kajang. It is in a vary bad condition. It is also the only traditional shophouse of the early merchants with a cantilvered gallery on its long side covered with wooden louvered windows. Surppoting this gallery are cast iron columns which have come from Europe at that time. It was the most impressive building you see as you enter this tin mining and rubber town. The front facade has three traditional full height windows with carved motives on top. The ground floor must have seen many tanents doing all sorts of local trades. If the local council has the foresight and the money it ought to safeguard this unique historical and cultural landscape of old Kajang. This main street ought to be pedestrainised like many old streets in out towns and city. Keep the traffic out. Give the place back to the residents...if there are any.." - Victor Chin.

"While walking back to Kajang Heritage Centre from Kedai Buku MakAli, took a photo of the narrow five-foot way linking old shophouses along Jalan Tengah. The row of relatively smaller shops are supposed to be the earliest brick shophouses in Kajang Town. History record says that the first batch of brick shops were built in 1895. The road was named Jalan Raja Alang in honor of a Mandailing Chief. But, it was renamed Jalan Tengah or Middle Road."

Kedai Emas Lee Chang Long

"Only if you were to spare some time walking slowly and looking up at the structures and designs of the old shop houses along Jalan Sulaiman, Jalan Besar, Jalan Tukang and Jalan Mendaling, you will notice artistic design and year of construction displayed at the buildings. Most of the buildings in "Kajang Old Town" were constructed around 1920s to 1930s. The architecture of these shop houses is a combination of traditional Chinese and European design. The ground floor was used for commercial activities and the upper floor as living space for the family. The older street of Jalan Tukang has more varied display of design as compared to others. Till today, the corner Lee Chang Long goldsmith shop stands as a Kajang landmark. Formerly named Hong Bee, i.e. Low Ti Kok's shop had a panel of cast-iron floral motif (picture) which was torn down and replaced by flat wall some years ago." (Lee Kim Sin, September 4, 2007:

"Right in the heart of Kajang lies Xin Kwong Sang Woh Enterprise, a well-loved shop selling over 4,000 varieties of biscuits and snacks from yesteryear. You can't possibly miss this store, one quick glance from the corridor reveals hundreds of tins, literally stacked from floor to ceiling, filled with biscuits of every taste, texture, colour and shape. Sitting behind the shop's counter is a fragile-looking man. "113-year-old shop still selling 4,000 kinds of biscuits").

“More than fifty huge glass jars with red lids, and metal tins neatly arranged on metal shelves, from low to high, layer by layer, containing a wide variety of traditional biscuits and snacks, in a dazzling array of nearly a hundred flavours. Kwong Sang Woh, located in Kajang's old town, has been in business since 1907, staying in the same address for over a century, retaining the brick arcade architecture. 87-year-old Siew Pak Chong is the second generation owner, still quick-witted and alert despite his old age. He is a fixture at the shop counter, where he collects payments or chit-chat with his friends. Originally a grocery store, Kwong Sang Woh mainly sells daily supplies, and also a few biscuits. Since his son Siew Zi Kin (transliteration) and daughter-in-law Tan Bee Kien took over the reins, the shop gradually underwent a series of changes to specialize in selling traditional biscuits, their means of surviving business hardships faced by traditional grocery stores. Their customer base has also expanded outside ethnic Chinese to include other races such as Malays and Indians, and they are always busy. The golden era of grocery stores dated back in the 1950's and 60's, where you could find one almost everywhere, be it hustling streets or remote villages. Besides providing day-to-day goods, grocery stores also function as a uniting spot for the community to exchange information and build relationships. With the rapid economic growth and changes in the consumer market, dawns the elimination of traditional grocery stores. Chain hypermarkets, supermarkets, and mini marts spring up in residential neighbourhoods like mushrooms after the rain, dealing a heavy blow to traditional grocery stores. How would traditional grocery stores stand against pressure from the market segment, internet, monopolization, and operation difficulties, would be a topic worth exploring.” (文 Text/ 林汇川 Daniel Lim & 潘慧雯 Pua Hui Wen, © 2019 ECHINOIDEA SDN BHD: “加影的饼干店 Biscuit Shop in Kajang”).

Kiri: "Haji Tasmin bin Sakiban dipercayai pengasas sate di Malaysia. Sate di Kajang dipelopori oleh Hj. Tasmin bin Sakiban pada tahun 1917. Beliau berasal dari Pulau Jawa, Indonesia. Pada tahun 1914, Hj. Tasmin tiba di Kajang melalui Sungai Langat dan beliau berlabuh di tebing Sungai Jelok (kini lokasi itu adalah belakang Plaza Metro). Wak Darmon, iaitu bapa saudara Hj. Tasmin yang mengajaknya datang ke Kajang. Adik kandung Hj. Tasmin, iaitu Rono bin Sakiban sampai ke Kajang lebih awal iaitu pada tahun 1911. Hj Tasmin memulakan perniagaannya di Kajang dengan menjual sup dan nasi kepal atau ketupat. Pada tahun 1917, Haji Tasmin memulakan perniagaan satenya. Pada ketika itu, semua pelanggan memakan sate dengan mencelup sate ke dalam satu mangkuk kuah yang besar. Sate dijual secara berkandar di sekitar kawasan Kajang bermula dari Kampung Paya, Batu 14 hingga Pekan Kajang. Penjaja sate ini akan menyinggah ke rumah-rumah yang memanggilnya di sepanjang perjalanan. Rono turut membantu Haji Tasmin untuk menjual sate secara sambilan. Beliau bekerja di ladang getah beberapa tempat seperti di West Country, Kajang. Maklum balas daripada pelanggan telah mengubah cara sajian sate. Haji Tasmin memperkenalkan mangkuk besar dan kecil untuk setiap pelanggan. Para pelanggan tidak lagi berkongsi mangkuk untuk mencelup kuah sate. Kemudiannya mangkuk kecil dan cili disediakan untuk pelanggan yang inginkan rasa kuah yang pedas. Ada pendapat mengatakan Wak Darmon juga menjalankan perniagaan sate selepas Haji Tasmin. Perniagaan sate Wak Darmon diteruskan oleh anaknya Wak Bagong dan menantu lelakinya Rono Sakiban. Pada awal 1940, sate dijual menggunakan kereta tolak dan berhenti di Kedai Kopi Ban Seng di Jalan Sulaiman sekarang. Pelanggan sate akan duduk di sekeliling kereta tolak dan ada juga yang makan didalam kedai kopi. Sate di Kajang seterusnya berkembang di gerai-gerai sate, medan sate lama dan baharu serta menerima tempahan untuk jamuan di semua peringkat. Sekarang sate dihidangkan di hotel-hotel besar dan juga dalam sistem Penerbangan Malaysia (MAS). Sumber: Facebook Hj Azam Aziz" (Facebook Bandar Kajang, 10 Julai 2020:

Menurut sasterawan Selangor Maaruf Mahmud dalam catatan autobiografinya, semasa beliau belajar di Kolej Bahasa Jepun yang terletak di Pekan Kajang pada tahun 1943, harga secucuk sate di Kajang adalah 2 sen, kemudian baru kemudiannya naik 3 sen dan 4 sen secucuk. Kalau beli 100 cucuk catatnya harganya cuma 3 ringgit sahaja, cuma perlu duduk sekitar 1 jam di bangku kayu kecil menunggu 'wak sate' siap membakarnya satenya. Kini harga sate Kajang sekitar RM1.50 - 3 secucuk, perniagaan yang bermula secara menjaja dari rumah ke rumah dan di sudut pekan kini menjadi perniagaan yang maju dan menguntungkan. Restoran Sate Kajang Hj.Samuri contohnya boleh kita anggap salah satu restoran paling besar di Kajang yang dibelinya dengan harga 12 juta pada sekitar tahun 1998. Restoran yang asalnya merupakan bekas bangunan Dato' Nazir ini terletak di hadapan stesen MRT Stadium Kajang boleh memuatkan lebih daripada seribu pelanggan dalam satu - satu masa...beza benarlah dengan zaman tahun 40an penjaja hanya ada 3 - 4 pelanggan sahaja dalam satu - satu masa yang duduk dibangku - bangku kecil. Sate Kajang yang asalnya dipelopori oleh Haji Tasmin, Rono & Wak Darmon (bapa saudara mereka) yang mula menjaja di Pekan Kajang pada tahun 1916 telah meninggalkan legasi besar aset budaya untuk daerah kita dan diraikan oleh semua bangsa yang juga telah berjaya membawa nama dan identiti Kajang terkenal dengan jolokan 'Bandar Sate Malaysia'." Kedai Kopi Mui Suan

"In Kajang in the 1960s, Kok Wah National Theatre was the core around which the town revolved. Very often, families would take the kids out for a matinee show on a Sunday afternoon and after, there was only one place to go: Mui Suan. My grandmother, my Ah Po built a coffeeshop from her savings during the Japanese occupation. Having migrated to then Malaya from Hainan Island, she worked hard, selling ais kacang and cendol out of a wooden pushcart. No one knew why she was never given a difficult time by the Japanese, as many at the time were. Perhaps food was seen as sacred and those who peddled it were spared. Or maybe the Japanese simply enjoyed her homemade cendol too much. A few year after the occupation ended, Ah Po had saved enough money to buy two adjacent shophouses. One for Ta Leh (meaning 'Uncle' in Hainanese), and one for Papa. That's how Mui Suan began in 1954, in the corner lot shophouses of Kajang Bazaar. Set between the local theatre and high traffic Foh Hup bus station, every day was a good business day at Mui Suan. Ta Leh helmed the coffee and toast station, straining coffee through stocking-like bags with water boiling over a charcoal fire. Ah Po scooped short, thick tails of freshly made cendol into a bowl of shaved ice. Papa and Mummy manned their nasi lemak stall out front, serving porcelain plates of the national breakfast to regular customers-turned-friends — my classmate's father, the friendly Indian aunty who lives across the road, Papa's drinking buddies. Kajang folks patronised Mui Suan profusely, and not just for their breakfast fix. ... Kajang Bazaar was demolished in 1993 and Mui Suan has since moved to Pasar Besar Kajang on Jalan Jelok to a much smaller establishment. It's a lot less glamorous than it used to be, but it still serves the oldest of friends." (Rueann Dass, Apr 28, 2016:

A BRIEF HISTORY OF SRI SUBRAMANIYA SWAMI TEMPLE, KAJANG

The rapid development of Kajang and its surrounding vicinity from 1890 onwards and the mass migration of Chinese and Indian workforce into the areas resulted in the demand for places of worship for the various communities. This resulted in the setting up of shrines by these communities to meet their spiritual needs and also a place to seek solace and inner peace especially for those who have left their families and home to seek fortunes in another country. There is a popular Tamil saying. "Do not live in a place where there is no Temple".

Hence, it is not surprising that these settlers established a number of temples, tokongs and churches to meet the spiritual needs of their community. Many of the early settlers in the plantations were of Tamil origin and were very religious. Therefore shrines were built in almost all the plantations where prayers and religious ceremonies were undertaken by the devotees. Later these shrines were developed into proper temples devoted to specific deities.

The Malaysian Hindus of Kajang are third and fourth generations of descendants who came over since the mid-1800s from India and Sri Lanka (Ceylon then). Historically many of the early pioneers of these communities settled down at the Jalan Reko area of Kajang and subsequently the surrounding areas in Hulu Langat. Initially they were engaged in the rubber industry, railways, roads and government service. Around that time, Kajang and the surrounding areas witnessed the rapid economic development with the discovery of tin and the opening of plantations. In fact this region had some of the biggest mines and plantations then, including the biggest open cast mine at Serdang.

At the same time when there was mass migration of labour workforce to the mines and plantations, there was also a movement of educated personnel from India and Sri Lanka to work as administrators in the Malayan Government services and also in plantations. The Hindu community within these expatriates mainly settled in common areas to provide themselves a sense of belonging together and also for personal security.

One such place where the Hindu community settled in Kajang was at Jalan Reko. According to the elders the community, there was already a small temple (shrine) dedicated to Lord Subramaniya on a piece of land at Jalan Reko as early as 1905 for the Hindu community.

Based on the available documented official records, efforts towards establishing a permanent location for the Sri Subramaniya Swami Temple dated back to 1916 when a group of Hindu pioneers at Jalan Reko Kajang, took a bold initiative to purchase the land on which the shrine was located from 2 Chinese gentlemen.

Land office records indicate that in 1916, five pioneers namely Thambipillay s/o Sinnathamby, Thamboo s/o Valupillai, Karuppiyah Pillay/o Ramasamy Pillai, Saminathan s/o Muthiah and Letchumanan Chettiar s/o Narayanan Chettiar collectively purchased Lot 624 Mukim of Kajang, measuring about 3 acres, in the Mukim of Kajang for the construction a proper temple for Lord Subramaniya Swami. The efforts of these pioneering elders ensured that the temple land was secured legally. The temple was built in accordance with the Hindu Agamic practices.

As a result, this temple today is not only one of the oldest Hindu place of worship in the District of Ulu Langat but also in the State of Selangor. It stands as a testimony of passion, devotion, dedication and commitment of the Kajang Hindu community. This historic temple dedicated to Lord Subramaniya Swami is a significant symbol for the Hindu community of Kajang.

"The Temple is the oldest established Hindu Temple in Kajang which has witnessed the development of Kajang Town from a rural settlement to a modern suburban township." (Lee Kim Sin, 16 Januari 2016: "Sri Subramaniya Swamy Temple Kajang is celebrating its Centennial Anniversary this year (1916-2016)").

Cabaran Pemeliharaan Sejarah dan Sosio-Budaya Kajang

"The various culture of Kajang & people unfolding through layers of diversity ... Sense of belongings with enrichment of old culture, the business that runs on the day & everyday, to make sure the life is on-going ... The lack of quality for old generation to be able to adjust to new condition, similarly for the new generation as they hardly adapt to the old culture of Kajang. The old and new are co-exist within the same Kajang yet disconnected in terms of fusion of culture and communication. ... The remnants of unmaintained structures, abandoned closed shophouses and the recession of old businesses from time to time tends to increase the possibility of displacement issue as the increase of new development and immigrants causing fading of sense of belonging. ... Kajang is dynamic in its aspect of walkability, accessibility with diversified people using the public spaces, yet it is not dynamic in the aspect of cultural integration."
